Overview

Amy Gregory litigates high-stakes disputes in federal and state courts across the nation. Her expertise is diverse: Amy has litigated cases relating to antitrust, breach of contract, the False Claims Act, insurance and intellectual property among several other complex practice areas. Likewise, Amy's clients range from large companies to small business and individuals in large class actions.

RESULTS

Amy has contributed to several major legal wins.

Amy helped secure a $19 million settlement with Laboratory Corporation of America on behalf of two whistleblower clients in a landmark False Claims Act case. Her clients alleged that the lab testing giant was part of a conspiracy to pay kickbacks to doctors in order to persuade the doctors to order blood tests. Amy led efforts on briefing the summary judgment opposition and several key discovery issues. News of the settlement was reported by major news outlets, legal and trade publications including ABC News, Bloomberg Law, WIS News, Law.com, Law360, Beckers Hospital Review, and LabPulse.com. In Leonard v. John Hancock Life Insurance Co., Amy represented a proposed class of insurance policy owners over allegations of breach of contract and false illustrations. Amy took several critical depositions of John Hancock's witnesses, including its Chief Actuary, eliciting information that was central to the outcome of the case. The parties reached a class-wide settlement of $93 million in cash, before fees and expenses, plus non-cash benefits valued at up to $50.48 million, including a cost of insurance freeze for five years.

Amy and a team from Susman Godfrey have secured multiple settlements with various banks accused of conspiring to rig LIBOR in In re: Libor-Based Financial Instruments Antitrust Litigation. These settlements with Barclays, Citibank, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC provide a total settlement fund of $590 million for the benefit of a class of plaintiffs that includes cities, pension funds and others known as the "over-the-counter" purchasers. The plaintiff class represented by Amy and the Susman Godfrey team was the only proposed class in the multidistrict litigation to win class certification. Read more.

Amy represents a proposed class of victims who allege that MindGeek has violated state and federal sex trafficking and child pornography laws by knowingly receiving, distributing, and profiting from thousands of videos and images depicting child sexual abuse material. Amy led the briefing on opposing MindGeek's motion to dismiss, which the court denied on the basis that Section 230 did not bar the claims – a huge win for Amy's clients.
