In her conversation with Patrick, Krisina discusses what it's like growing up in a border town, the balance between following your gut and having a plan, and being as efficient as possible while in the office to make time for other priorities. She also talks about the judges she clerked for and their impact on her, the importance of staying involved in her community, and how critical having a support system has been to her success.

The Newfangled Lawyer podcast aims to humanize the lawyer experience through candid conversations and storytelling. Listen to Krisina's episode here.
